

Casual or business use of cell phones should continue to be banned on domestic and international air flights. The amount of ambient noise in most aircraft cabins will force the person making the call to speak so loud that it will be extremely intrusive to the other people in the cabin. There is no way to quietly in the cabin, and even if a person uses a headset, he/she still needs to speak; and when that happens that person's voice will disturb the cabin.

If the government wants to add the ability to use cell phones in an "emergency" situation, that should be allowed. If the only way to justify that, is to allow them to be used in a non-emergency situation, then I say do not do allow it.
